Nadia Under Siege

by Steven Saint

It was Super Bowl Sunday, 1997, almost exactly one year ago. Beth Santangelo, Valhalla High School's recently retired librarian, probably couldn't tell you which teams were playing, but she was looking for a way to get out of the house and avoid the game.

She and a friend, Emerald Middle School English teacher Janice MacGurn, decided to go find Nadia Davies.

Davies, just elected to the Grossmont Union High School District Governing Board in November, is not an easy person to find.

Nadia will be the first to describe her and her husband's patterns of habitation as "complex," stating in a recent court document that "our home is less a home in the conventional sense, and more a place to sleep, to depart from, and return to, rather than a place where long hours are spent tending to homemaking activities."

Santangelo and MacGurn decided to go out to Lake Murray Boulevard, to a modest duplex where Nadia and Tom Davies were registered to vote and where Nadia had claimed to live during the summer months preceding her election.

They approached the unit only to find a Super Bowl party in full swing. MacGurn says they greeted the two young men standing outside and identified themselves as "private citizens" interested in how people felt about the proposed stadium expansion.

The guys said they were students at San Diego State University and the unit's sole residents. They invited the women to join the festivities inside.

The women didn't see either of the Davies and quickly left.

"It was a dump," Santangelo says, "not the kind of place Nadia Davies would park her gold Mercedes."

Of course, Santangelo and MacGurn didn't really think they would find Nadia. Having backed incumbent Ada Reep's unsuccessful bid for re-election, they had long suspected Davies of carpetbagging: finding a place to hang her voter registration during the school board campaign while actually living outside the district in Del Cerro.

When they returned to get a signed statement from the inhabitants of the Lake Murray duplex, they received a completely different reception. On this subsequent Saturday morning, a man named Michael Paslay came to the door, called them liars and literally ran them off the property.

Santangelo had knocked on the door of a bizarre world, in which every event has a double reality. Nadia Davies swears she lived at the duplex. The neighbor in the adjoining unit swears she didn't. Davies describes herself as a whistleblower facing constant harassment from mentally unstable administrators and power-hungry unions. Her detractors describe her as mentally unstable and hungry for revenge.

Everyone agrees she has shaken up the Grossmont district, for better or worse. In the year since the 1997 Super Bowl, Nadia Davies came under siege from at least three different quarters. The district attorney investigated her for possible election fraud, the teacher's union has asked for a judge to rule on her residency at the time of the election, and this week, an organization of teachers and parents submitted close to 29,000 signatures in an effort to recall her.

Davies remains mystified about what people have against her.

"I have to be bad for a reason," she said. "What is the reason? They give me no reason."

Santangelo and MacGurn were shook up. They had been playing private investigators, but hadn't expected such a hostile encounter. The decided to go to the district attorney.

"We believed Nadia was illegally elected and her intent is the destruction of the district," Santangelo said. "We have since been advised that in politics, residency laws are violated more than they are practiced."

California election laws preclude carpetbagging. The Election Code states that people must register to vote where they actually live, and candidates and officeholders must live in the district they seek to govern. While a person may have several "residences," he or she has only one "domicile."

Residences are temporary habitations — be they college dormitories or military bases — where a person may reside but does not intend to live permanently. The domicile is the place where a person's "habitation is fixed," where he or she intends to remain and where he or she intends to return after an absence.

Even though the voter registration card asks for a "residence" address, people are supposed to register to vote at their domiciles, said county Registrar of Voters Mikel Haas in an interview just prior to the 1996 election.

"If a candidate is not physically there, has never lived there or established a presence there, has no intention of living there, her voter registration may be fraudulent," he said. "That would probably be something the district attorney would want to look at."

On Feb. 1, just days after the Super Bowl, Santangelo sent a letter to District Attorney Paul Pfingst requesting an investigation of Nadia Davies' residency at the time of the November election. Co-signers included Janice and Bruce MacGurn, Grossmont Education Association President Linda Pierce and California School Employees Association spokeswoman Loretta Purdy.

Deputy District Attorney Sally Williams had quite a trail to follow. The Davies have had five different registration addresses since 1990. Nadia was registered to vote for a decade at the Del Cerro Heights home they purchased in 1980. In 1990, Tom ran

Gasoline 'divorcement' law before council

I recently returned from a trip to spend Christmas with my family in Austin, Texas. We bit the bullet and drove the 2,300 miles in our van. Our travel budget included a significant amount for gas. What we didn't know was how little that significant amount would be. Once we left San Diego County, gas prices fell dramatically. In Tucson, Ariz. (our first stop for gasoline) we paid $1.24 a gallon for 87 octane. At our final destination in Austin, we paid 96 cents a gallon.

I understand that gasoline is cheaper in Texas because it is produced and refined there. However, how does this explain the price for gas at a Stuckey's (No, I didn't buy any pecan logs.) in "Nowhere" New Mexico? A gallon there cost $1.15. Gasoline prices right off Interstate 10 in downtown El Paso hung in there at $1.21 a gallon. Closer to home, we have all heard the stories about gas in Big Bear being cheaper than here in San Diego.

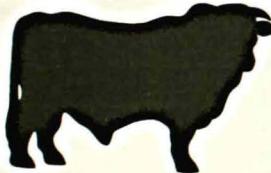

Does this mean that we should definitely jump on the gasoline divorce bandwagon? Maybe yes - maybe no! Myself and Councilmember Lake were lobbied heavily by ARCO representatives to oppose any ordinance dealing with divorce. But then, the oil companies have a vested interest in opposing such an ordinance. On the other hand, how trustworthy are independent owners who refuse to give their names and insist on testifying from behind a screen. How do we know these individuals don't have an axe to grind with the oil companies?

What we must do is set aside our emotions and look at the facts that are being presented to us by both sides of the controversy. Somewhere in those "facts" is the truth about what is really happening with our gasoline prices and what is the best way to address this situation. Getting to the truth is difficult. I have seen all sorts of complicated graphs and statistics from the oil companies, but little from the other side except for rhetoric. Oil companies, after all, are easy to hate. The proponents of divorce owe us more than just nameless tirades if they want our support - they owe us honest information.

The Lemon Grove City Council will be discussing our position on a divorce ordinance in the very near future. It will be agendized when factual information from both sides has been collected. This Council does not like to be bullied or cajoled into taking a position that affects our citizens. We look to facts when making our decisions. We also do not blindly follow the lead of the county or other cities.

I do not know if divorce is the best answer to our gasoline price situation. But this discussion has been beneficial in two ways. First, it has showed the oil companies that if they are in any way manipulating the market, the consumers are ready to put a stop to it. It has also showed the consumers that we have some control over these forces in our lives if we stop shopping for convenience (the gas station on our way to work) and start shopping for price (the cheapest gas down the road a bit). Please follow this issue in the media and keep in touch with City Hall so you can give us your thoughts at the Council meeting where we discuss a divorce ordinance.

Commentary

by Bob Burns

The last straw? Well, this is it. Barring the public from public meetings is unconstitutional, if not criminal. The very people who pay for the operation of our public school systems are being locked out of meetings which are purported to be concerned with the expenditure of their money and more importantly, the education of their children. Police style guards are preventing all but a few from attending the Grossmont High School District Board meetings. A few "lottery" tickets are issued to keep the audience of the meetings to a low enough level that they may be controlled by the board majority of LaChapelle, Davies, and Olsen. Moving to a smaller room was a most definite touch to assure this end.

As far as I know, the Brown Act is surely being violated, and the concept of fair representation and exposure of public affairs is certainly being abused. We were always told, by counsel, that even the suspicion of hiding or misleading information from all of the public, was a violation, even if it was not in legal interpretation. The Grossmont School Board is arrogantly defying the very people who pay their salaries and provide the money for their use in behalf of the children of the district. Politically, I would think it is absolute suicide, and have not a clue as to why they are doing it. They say that power corrupts, and this must be the case here, but how anyone can perceive that such actions are beneficial to anyone, is beyond my simple understanding.

Recalls are expensive, hard work for many activist volunteers, and certainly divisive of a community. Choosing up sides, where we should all be working together to solve difficult problems, is wasteful and invidious. Regular elections cost a lot, and special elections cost a whole lot more. It seems to me that if we would be more attentive in regular ballot measures, and candidates, the second guessing of recalls would be less likely. If candidates would be truthful about their intentions and abilities, we could make better choices. If the special interests did not snow us with specious and outright falsehoods, we would not have to vote something or someone in before we become aware of the true effects of that choice.

I am convinced that power struggles and personal agendas are the sole machinery that drives the Grossmont Board's actions. I signed the recall petition of Ms Davies and refused to ink that of June Mott. I have known June many years and firmly believe her to be a truly altruistic public servant. From what I read and hear of The Chapelle, Davies, and (absentee?) Olsen, I must presume otherwise. What has been occurring in the Grossmont District has been certainly less than attendance to duty with regards to running a proper school system.

God knows that I have seen many such politicians in my day, that made grandiose promises, and once elected became Mr. or Ms. Hydes. Lying has become more of a snicker these days, not even a venial sin. Infidelity is a sitcom joke, and criminal activity a parlor game. I guess that we get what we deserve if we vote for them.

But, then there are so very many who do serve honorably and do not have the inner characters that we see on Seinfeld, Frazier, or Ellen. They are true public servants, and sad to say are not often elected because they eschew notoriety. But they are out there, and if we take the time to look deeply, we can find and appreciate them.

Initiatives and recalls will be a common practice as long as we are apathetic about choosing our public officials.

Reel Thoughts

'Titanic' not only great new film out

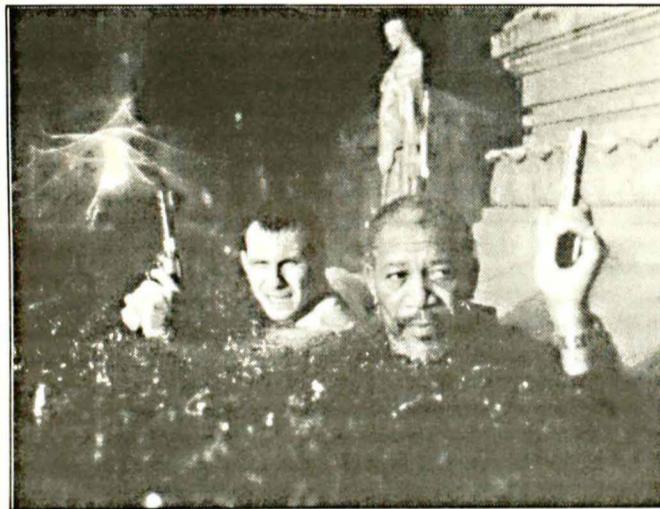

by Betty Jo Tucker

Believe it or not, films other than "Titanic" are showing at movie theaters this month. Watery special-effects and action aplenty fill "Hard Rain," a generally exciting robbery/disaster movie starring Morgan Freeman, Christian Slater, Randy Quaid and Minnie Driver. And Denzel Washington fights evil incarnate in a new supernatural thriller called "Fallen," while Emma Thompson struggles with emotions deeper than the record snow in "The Winter Guest."

For the child in all of us, "Star Kid" provides a fun ride inside a high-tech cyber-suit that comes to life with the help of Joseph Mazzello from "Jurassic Park." Last, but not least, "Kundun" offers a breath-taking, if too-lengthy, look at the life and times of Tibet's Dalai Lama.

Alas, these films may be overlooked by a moviegoing public obsessed with watching the Titanic sink over and over again. One of my own granddaughters has seen this movie five times! And she is not alone. Repeat admissions everywhere are helping director James Cameron make back the $200 million spent on this most expensive film of all time. "Titanic" has already earned an amazing $197 million in just four weeks.

Why is this film so popular? I realize that teen-age girls are fascinated with its leading man,

Leonardo DiCaprio — a fascination that escapes me. But, hey, I never understood Troy Donahue's appeal either.

Perhaps people feel they must see the world's costliest movie. If so, why see it more than once? Could the answer simply be that "Titanic" is a great movie? Many critics say so. Disturbing little details keep me from making that claim, in spite of my admiration for the film's savvy technology.

For example, the sight of lovely Kate Winslet running around a sinking ship in her fabulous evening gown, while everyone else wears life jackets, distracts me completely from the story on screen. But when I whisper my concerns to my husband, he snaps back, "Don't be silly! How could she look drop-dead gorgeous in those ugly things?" So much for cinematic realism.

I also have trouble believing that a 100-year old woman would walk barefoot in pools of water on a ship's deck, let alone climb up on the rail and drop a valuable necklace overboard. Oh, well, it's only a movie.

And so I fear the mystery of "Titanic's" success will continue to exercise my mind, unless you, dear readers, can solve it for me.

Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.

— Thomas Jefferson, 1787

PG Perspectives

by Phillip Giannangeli

PG's solutions

The Swedes want to buy reindeer from the Russians. The Russians are trying to broker an agreement with Saddam Hussein. Saddam Hussein accuses the U.S. of being real nasty to him. The U.S. wants to irradiate meat, including, I presume, any reindeer meat imported from Sweden. These are real problems, folks. Problems desperately seeking solutions.

I think all of these concerns could be easily addressed if the following were done. We mount a worldwide campaign to save the reindeer (A Rescue Rudolph crusade as it were). The Swedes then won't have to go to Russia to get their reindeer thus pushing the Russians further out of the orchestra pit of the world stage. We next tell the Russians to butt out of Iraq because they aren't the hot stuff they once were and our bassoon players are getting anxious for some playing time. Finally we irradiate Saddam because he continues to be infectious and is harmful to all people. Viola, all those tricky problems solved.

Tell me, why can't the State Department see such obvious solutions to these complex problems? I'd be more than willing to share these and other ideas with them, but they haven't called me yet. I'm wondering: what the heck are they waiting for?

Nonetheless, I've decided that since they seem to be having difficulty reaching me, I'll go public with my advice and they can just pretend they thought of it themselves. That way they won't be embarrassed and can get going, cleaning up these messes. And while I'm at it, here are some other very obvious solutions to international problems.

The Chinese can't seem to get the human rights thing right. I suggest we send them the most recognized human rights advocate we have in our congress to show them the way. We will send Jesse Helms for an extended visit. Jesse can tell them his vision of the dignity of man and which rights he values. We'll let the Chinese know that Jesse will stay there until some fundamental changes are made. I think the Chinese, after having Jesse around for a time, might be willing to change some of their practices if it means sending him home quicker. It's hardball, but what else that we've tried has been effective?

What to do about the Middle East? I'll tell you what we should do. Pay for a haircut and shave for Arafat. Provide King Hussein with lifts for his shoes so he won't always be looking up. Tell Netanyahu to quit being so enamored with his own voice and start talking to people and not at them. Buy new chairs for the photos ops with Assad of Syria. That way they won't all look like midgets in the land of giant furniture. And finally (and not soon enough I must add), tell the leaders of Kuwait they can take a hike next time they feel threatened by their now good friend Iraq. These suggestions might not solve all the problems in the Middle East, but it would sure make the viewing easier.

There are other global problems too. It would take thousands of words to lay out the solution scenario for each, so I'll just give mini versions of what needs to be done.

Disarm every man, woman, and child in Africa. That's goes for AK 47's to machetes. Provide the people with farm equipment to feed themselves and computers to prepare them for the future. First person to spout nationalism or tribal superiority gets shipped off to Bosnia.

Send the killers of Northern Ireland and those of Sarajevo to Sicily. Tell the mafia that these two groups are agents of the U.S. Justice Department and out to get them. Let all these likable folks have at each other for a while and see if the world doesn't turn out to be a better place for their efforts.

Flood the European Common Market with Susan B. Anthony dollars. This would really upset the French. And isn't that a good idea on its surface alone?

I could go on and on but I just got a call from UN Headquarters in Kansas City. It seems some wise folks there are interested in my ideas. At last.

the BEST of EAST COUNTY

The "Best of East County" [January 8 issue] was an off-the-cuff selection of almost anything by the staff of Forum Publications. It was not a formal survey or statistical analysis. The "best of" had to exist within the experiences of Forum writers. Even so, some members of the community have responded with surprise that they were not included. So, here they are:

Omelette Factory in Santee would like to be included as the best breakfast place in East County. This nomination has been seconded by our distributor and Channel 8's unknown eater.

Country Choice in Spring Valley would also like to be nominated as best breakfast/lunch place in East County.

Mr. E's Deli in Spring Valley would like to have seen a complete issue of the Spring Valley Bulletin dedicated to the best of Spring Valley.

The Outback Steakhouse in El Cajon would like to be included in the best steak category.

If we aren't busy enough, it looks like Forum writers need to eat out more often and more places.

The "Best of East County" was meant to help us take a moment to laugh at life's frustrating moments, to nod at common experience and most important, to thank you, the community, for your support.

for the Grossmont board claiming a different address, on Baltimore Drive inside the district lines.

In 1991, almost a year after Tom was elected, the couple registered to vote on Broadmoor Drive in La Mesa. In 1993, they registered on Dewane Drive in El Cajon.

In 1994, both Davies ran for school boards. Tom vacated his Grossmont seat and ran for the county board. Nadia ran for the San Diego Unified School District board. Tom maintained his voter registration in East County while Nadia registered again in Del Cerro Heights, where Tom registered after winning the county seat.

In July of 1996, she and Tom registered to vote back in East County, this time at the Lake Murray duplex. Two weeks later, Nadia pulled papers to run for the Grossmont board.

Nadia admits that the Lake Murray move was a temporary measure with political currency. Her 18-year-old goddaughter lived in the Grossmont district. Her stepfather, Michael Paslay, was called to Paso Robles to work for six months. Rather than let the goddaughter live alone, Nadia moved into the Lake Murray Drive residence.

"When I decided to run for the GUHSD School Board, we moved from our home to the address on Lake Murray Boulevard," Nadia states in a sworn declaration. "In early October, 1996, Mike Paslay anticipated returning to San Diego full time, having completed his job in Paso Robles, California, and that, as a result, we began looking for another residence."

The district attorney's office was being fed tips on a weekly basis from those sympathetic to the cause, including members of the teacher's union. In March, the Grossmont Education Association (GEA) went on to request that the Grossmont Governing Board, itself, investigate Davies' residency.

The issue of Nadia's residency before the election became clouded when the board agreed to look at her residency after the election. The Davies had just received confidential voter registrations from the court and did not want their post-Lake Murray address published.

The Davies told the judge Nadia had suffered surveillance, harassment and even death threats. She said one male made a threat to Davies' face prior to a board meeting. As he had threatened a public official, Davies alerted security but the man ran away before he could be identified. She has also received pornographic letters in efforts to upset her, which have been sent to the postal inspector.

The Grossmont board directed county counsel Ellen Michaels to verify Davies' residency, but not to keep copies of any records, making sure that the documents could not be later released under the state Public Records Act.

The Davies brought Michaels an array of documents, but nothing as simple as a tax return or trash bill. They presented a grant deed for a condominium on Baltimore Drive, in the name of Alfonsina Q. Davies, Nadia's daughter. They also showed an SDG&E bill for the same condo with no name on it, a Pacific Bell bill with the name "Maria Bendayan," and an advertising flyer with an address label on it made out to Tom Davies at the Baltimore address.

Michaels noted the consistency of the address on the documents and Nadia's sworn statement that she lives in the district.

The school board voted 3-1 to accept Davies' residency (Nadia could not vote; June Mott voted no, requesting in vain to see the original documents.)

By coincidence, the Davies condo is across the street from where Linda Pierce of the GEA lives. She proceeded to chronicle her daily drives by the Davies' place, suspecting that they did not actually live there. The district attorney began to get tips regarding the Baltimore residency, including the story that Nadia had asked La Mesa postal officials to throw away mail addressed to the condominium.

But the district attorney's investigation was concerned with Davies' residency at the time of the election, and Pfingst decided in mid-July that they probably couldn't get a perjury conviction.

Sally Williams' boss, Paul Morley, said vague laws and "conflicting evidence" brought the probe to a standstill.

"Problems with the language of the law was a consideration," Morley said. "Some of the evidence pointed one way and some the other way. It would take a lot of man-hours and months and we did not have a case that would be prosecutable."

Despite Morley's caution that the Davies' file is still open, supporters declared her vindicated. But the teacher's union had only begun to fight.

Linda Pierce tells the story of Nadia Davies' visit to Dick Hoy's U.S. History class at Santana High School. In the middle of classwork, Hoy was visited by Davies, Trustee Kevin LaChapelle and Superintendent Thomas Godley.

Hoy, concerned about reports that Davies would routinely take up class time with spontaneous talks to students, nodded to the entourage but continued his instruction.

Pierce said that the trustees left, but then returned and asked to be introduced. Davies proceeded to recount her biography and views on district politics, and then dressed Hoy down in front of the students for his behavior.

"I think what made teachers angry was Nadia Davies' forays into the classrooms," Pierce said. "Things changed when she started going into classrooms and telling teachers they weren't good people in front of their kids."

GEA leaders were disappointed when the district attorney dropped the Davies question. By that time, attorney Ann Smith was researching the law, combing public records and had hired well-known San Diego private investigator Manny Lopez to interview witnesses.

Smith recommended that the union get a judge to hold a hearing regarding Davies' residency before the election. This civil action (as opposed to the DA's search for criminal activity) could only be granted by the state's attorney general, Dan Lungren.

Smith filed a request for such a hearing in mid-October, technically called a "notice of application to file complaint in quo warranto."

Included with the legal arguments and history of Davies' residency, the quo warranto filing has a sworn statement from Nancy Miner, the woman living next door to Mike Paslay in the Lake Murray duplex, and Manny Lopez' account of his March interview with Nadia's goddaughter, Samantha Henderson. Lopez also interviewed another Paslay housemate, Todd Mao.

Miner states that she lived in the duplex for 2 1/2 years, throughout the summer of 1996 and until a couple weeks after the election. She confirms that Paslay intended to be out of town one week and Samantha's godmother would be over to watch her while he was gone.

"I saw Ms. Davies or her Mercedes parked at the Paslay residence on a few occasions," Miner states. "I did not believe that she was a 'resident' of the Paslay household and I would not have introduced her to anyone at the time as 'my neighbor.' Although I saw Mr. Davies on approximately two occasions, I never observed him spend the night at the Paslay residence."

Miner states that Nadia did not return after Mao became a resident in October.

Lopez claims he interviewed the 18-year-old Henderson on the evening of March 17, 1997. He states she was vague about times and months, but that Nadia had been asked to watch over her due to past misconduct and Tom had "slept over a couple of nights."

The next day, Lopez states Todd Mao called him, claiming to be Henderson's roommate. He said he didn't know Nadia Davies and that she wasn't there when he moved in. Mao, Henderson and Paslay had further decided not to talk to anyone about Davies anymore.

Nadia Davies filed her response to the GEA quo warranto in mid-November. She opposes a hearing on the residency question, stating the request is politically motivated by a teacher's union that doesn't want to negotiate with a school board it doesn't control.

The Davies response includes Nadia's sworn statement as to her occupancy of the Lake Murray duplex and the various forms of harassment that followed her to Baltimore Drive.

Oddly, there is a sworn statement from Michael Paslay, who claims early on that he was in Paso Robles five or six days out of the week. There is no sworn statement from Samantha Henderson, Todd Mao or even Volunteers gathered almost 29,000 signatures in an effort to put Nadia Davies back on the ballot.

Tom Davies, the people who would have been around Nadia day in and day out.

Paslay states that "to my knowledge," both Nadia and Tom Davies moved into his residence for the summer, up through November of 1996. He claims neighbor Nancy Miner was not home much after her son moved out in June.

His statement includes an alternate version of Super Bowl Sunday. In the Paslay version, Beth Santangelo and Janice MacGurn come to the door "in disguises (i.e. wigs, etc.)," posing as representatives of a survey company querying about the stadium expansion. When they return "about two months later," still in disguise, they confess that their real intent was snooping on Nadia. Paslay states he cut them off, called them liars and closed the door. He also said that he later recognized them at a Grossmont board meeting.

Both the teacher's union filing and the Davies response are now in the hands of Lungren's staff. They will review the material and give the attorney general an opinion regarding the holding of a hearing.

"I presume and trust they will make a decision on the merits of it," attorney Smith says. "But Dan Lungren will have to sign off on it."

Some people don't believe Dan Lungren will give the quo warranto a fair chance. While Smith was preparing the paperwork, others were launching a recall.

On June 19, Ken Blalack said he saw Davies ally David Kidder collecting signatures for a recall campaign against June Mott and Michael Harrelson.

Blalack, a businessman who describes himself as a "Goldwater conservative," says he voted straight Republican until 1988. The nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court and Pat Robertson's presidential aspirations start making him nervous about his party.

Since 1990, Blalack has been involved with political efforts to keep fundamentalists off school boards. But his Mainstream Education Alliance has nothing to do with religion. Citing student safety, mismanagement of district funds and a general sullying of Grossmont's reputation, Blalack issued an ultimatum to the governing board majority on Sept.

18: resign or be recalled.

The group decided within a week that recalling Nadia Davies alone would solve their problems.

Davies was served with recall papers on Oct. 16, the day after the GEA filed the quo warranto with Sacramento. On her way to a board workshop, she was handed the intent to recall signed by 10 district parents, one from each of the high schools.

True to form, Davies says she doesn't regret a single vote she's made in her year on the board. Grossmont is too hard on expulsions, she said, evidenced by the fact that as much as 90 percent of the expulsion appeals before the county Board of Education come from the Grossmont District. The school district represents itself at the appeal, costing time and money for the Grossmont district.

"In the Grossmont District you were always guilty until proven innocent," said Davies, appalled that students in California Youth Authority prisons have more rights. "I think our kids should have at least as much due process as those in jail have."

Recall efforts are not generally successful, in that the high signature threshold for ballot status precludes most half-hearted efforts. The grassroots support from teachers and parents, however, has yielded 28,640 signatures, giving Blalack a 7,000-signature buffer as the registrar begins throwing out names who either aren't registered to vote or aren't registered in the Grossmont district.

Beth Santangelo went from knocking on duplex doors to gathering signatures, postponing post-retirement travel plans in order to stop Nadia Davies. She says her yellow "Recall Nadia Davies - Save Grossmont District" became her uniform for the holidays, attracting flocks of people interested in telling tales of the beleaguered trustee.

During La Mesa Old Fashioned Christmas Village, a retired German teacher recounted his version of events at Monte Vista High School in 1986 which he believed triggered the current controversy.

"I truly believe she is evil," Santangelo says. "Her entire agenda has been vengeance."

The story goes that faculty and staff at Monte Vista High School knew when Nadia Davies was going to be in one of her moods. When she came to school wearing a turban, look out.

Davies began her career in the Grossmont Union High School District in 1968, teaching Spanish at Helix High, then moving to Monte Vista for the next 18 years. Her tenure ended in a bloody feud with administrators, culminating in a $2 million lawsuit against Superintendent Bob Pyle, Monte Vista Principal Chris Bogden, vice-principal cipals Jerry Gordinier and Paul Martin, and guidance information specialist Jennifer Elliott.

Most of those defendants are still in East County today, but most would not comment on the events of the 1986-87 school year for fear of reprisal.

"I feel Nadia's driving force is getting even with the people who crossed her up," says Trustee June Mott, president of the GEA at the time Davies was on the GEA board representing Monte Vista. "I've never understood her attitude of superiority."

Tension between staff members grew on campus, especially between Davies and classified personnel charged with giving guidance assistance to students. In the spring of 1987, vice-principal

Martin was asked to investigate a complaint filed by guidance information specialist Jennifer Elliott.

Elliott had been administering an advance-placement Spanish exam. Guidelines do not allow the teachers to administer such tests, protecting everyone from any cloud of conflict of interest.

Davies interrupted the test four times that day, insisting that the students be moved to alternate classrooms she felt would be more conducive to good test results. During the third interruption, after Elliott had already moved the kids once, Davies exploded in rage in front of the class.

"We did a thorough investigation," said Martin. "I interviewed all the kids in her class. The kids were not critical of her, but they indicated the woman came in and flipped out."

Elliott filed a complaint, hoping for an apology and restoration of professional relations. Superintendent Pyle offered Davies a comparable teaching position at Valhalla High in June, 1987. Davies filed a grievance, stating the transfer violated her contract.

All summer, the Davies wrangled about the transfer and countered with charges that the district was not only discriminating against Nadia because of her gender and ethnic background, but Monte Vista was refusing to educate minority children.

Jerry Gordinier (left), Paul Martin (center) and Chris Bogden were administrators at Monte Vista High School the year Nadia Davies was transferred.

tlement. The day San Diego Judge J. Lawrence Irving ordered Tom to resign, Nadia burst into tears, ran from the room and fainted.

An appellate court reinstated Davies to the board. He sued for attorney fees and costs. By the end of 1992, the district had spent around $313,000 on Davies-related litigation.

Nadia says the last 10 years have cost her dearly, but her faith in her own accomplishments leaves her undaunted by the sieges.

"If they do collect all the signatures against me, I hope the people of East County will select me again because I will always represent their interests," she says. "If I don't get recalled, these people are never going to leave me alone."
